1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-19 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Sprague et al (US 4,409,479) in view of Matsuura (US 5,889,280) and Leuchter (US 4,339,198).

Sprague et al shows an optical displacement measuring apparatus with a scale (18) with on optical gratings in two orthogonal directions formed thereon and a sensor head (10) including a photosensitive unit for optically detecting relative movement between the sensor head and the scale to provide a displacement signal. Sprague et al shows in figure 2 the sensor comprising a substrate and two photosensitive arrays (15, 15' and 17, 17') arranged to provide displacement signals along two axes. It would have been obvious to use known constructions for the detector arrays such as the array of Matsuura.

Leuchter teaches that it is known to print a grid on a flexible substrate so it can be placed on a curved surface (column 1, lines 43-51), teaching that this produces a accurate curved grating. It would have been obvious to use this known manner of making curved detection systems by forming the elements on flexible substrates and curving them to meet the needs at hand in particular applications because, as taught by Leuchter, this can produce "extremely close tolerance ... while bypassing the extremely complex fabrication" of forming curved elements in place. Those in the art could choose appropriate flexible materials.

The use of any known light source would have been obvious; electroluminescent light sources are known light sources.

As shown in figures 5A and 5B of Sprague, the arrays can be on either side of a substrate.
